

Medicinal cannabis in Australia

What is medicinal cannabis?

Also known as medical cannabis or medical marijuana, medicinal cannabis is the cannabis plant and its constituent cannabinoids (THC, CBD, CBN, etc.) that is used for therapeutic purposes to alleviate symptoms. There are more than 500 chemical compounds found within the cannabis plant, including over 114 different cannabinoids, which are thought to be responsible for most of the plant's therapeutic benefits.¹

Cannabinoids are primarily contained in cannabis resin, most abundantly on the female flower head, which is extracted for use in the manufacture of medicinal cannabis products. These plant cannabinoids mimic naturally-occurring cannabinoids found within the human body which act on our endocannabinoid system, fitting like a key and lock within the cell receptors.²

An unapproved medicine

Medicinal cannabis is legal, however almost all medicinal cannabis products in Australia are currently classified as unapproved products and are not available as registered prescription medicines. Because of this the pathways to gain access are different from usual prescription medications.

This means a doctor can prescribe medicinal cannabis but they need approval first to do so. As part of the approval process they must be able to justify:

- 🌿 why they are requesting the use of an unapproved medicine and
- 🌿 how they plan to monitor their patient.

Eligibility for medicinal cannabis

The following are some of the factors your treating doctor will take into consideration if they are to make an application for medicinal cannabis on your behalf:

1. SUPPORTING EVIDENCE:

Is your condition/illness supported by evidence (clinical studies or research) with the use of medicinal cannabis?

On 31 December 2019, over 130 conditions had been accepted for medicinal cannabis treatment in Australia, with over 60% of SAS B approvals having been granted for the treatment of chronic pain of unspecified origin.³

Other common indications include other pain conditions (cancer pain and symptom management and neuropathic pain and fibromyalgia), seizure management/epilepsy and psychological conditions (anxiety, anorexia, insomnia, post-traumatic stress disorder) and multiple sclerosis and movement disorders.³

2. Are you taking or have you tried standard medicines which have been unsuccessful or produced intolerable side effects?

If you answered yes to the first two queries, you are potentially eligible to access medicinal cannabis.

Please note: Eligibility does not guarantee approval.

3. Your treating doctor will also consider the possible impact of treatment on your overall life and whether this medicine is appropriate for you. This may consider the impact of medicinal cannabis on your life in regards to:

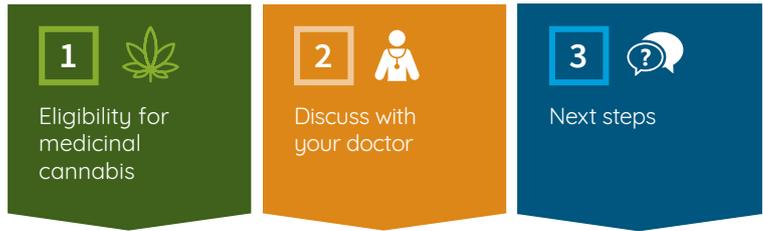

- Operating heavy machinery
- Driving
- Employment testing
- Whether you can afford this treatment (it is not currently covered by the Pharmaceutical Benefits Scheme (PBS))

Remember; your treating doctor is a highly trained medical practitioner and best placed to advise you on medical treatment for your condition.

Discuss with your doctor

It is recommended as a first step towards cannabinoid therapy that patients see their usual treating doctor, GP or specialist.

Some points to consider:

DO YOUR RESEARCH

You may wish to read appropriate clinical studies online relevant to your condition prior to visiting your doctor. Printing out these studies to take with you to your doctor appointment means you can discuss the clinical evidence with your medical practitioner. Peer-reviewed studies help practitioners better understand medicinal cannabis as a treatment option for your condition.

You can find research relating to various conditions by visiting greenchoices.com.au

HAVE PATIENCE

Medicinal cannabis is still very new in Australia. Most doctors have not been formally trained in prescribing medicinal cannabis, or may not be familiar with the pathways to access, which can be complex. Recognising that doctors who still have questions or need more evidence to feel comfortable prescribing is important. Together, you are more likely to find the best medical outcome for you.

BE HONEST WITH YOUR EXPERIENCE

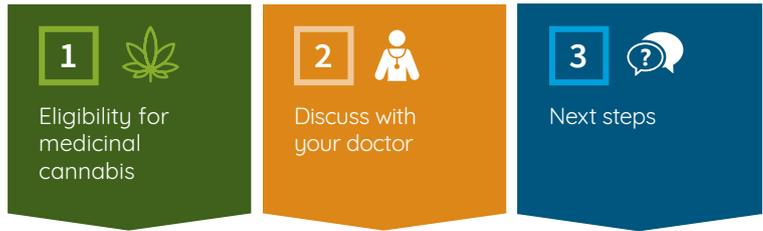

Now is also the time to be honest and advise your practitioner if you've already been taking cannabis and any effects – positive or negative from your experience so far.

FOLLOW MEDICAL ADVICE

There are many reasons why a practitioner will not prescribe medicinal cannabis. However, if you believe your doctor isn't willing to prescribe because they lack experience in medicinal cannabis and don't wish to learn more then you could consider section 3 Next Steps.

It is important that you understand your doctor's reasons for not wishing to proceed with medicinal cannabis treatment, as this medicine may not be suitable for you.

Next steps

We suggest the following steps:

1. Ask your doctor to contact Little Green Pharma directly on 1300 118 840 or email medical@lgpharma.com.au and we can help provide them with the information they need.
2. Ask your medical practitioner to also sign up to the greenchoices.com.au restricted access portal to access comprehensive resources for doctors.

MY DOCTOR IS HESITANT OR NOT WILLING TO LEARN MORE

Many practitioners still lack experience and knowledge with medicinal cannabis, and for this reason may not be comfortable prescribing this treatment option. If this is the case for your doctor, below are some options available to you:

OPTION ONE

Ask your doctor if they would consider medicinal cannabis if they could get assistance with the application process.

Answer is YES?

Ask them to contact Little Green Pharma directly as we can help provide information and support with the application process.

Phone 1300 118 840 or Email medical@lgpharma.com.au

Please also provide your doctor with the Doctor Factsheet on page 6 of this brochure.

Answer is NO?

You could ask your doctor to refer you to an experienced medical practitioner to help them with your treatment. A list of other doctors and clinics that are experienced with the prescribing process for medicinal cannabis can be found at:

www.greenchoices.com.au/patients/find-a-doctor

OPTION TWO

If your doctor is unfamiliar with medicinal cannabis and does not wish to learn more or write you a referral, you can also visit the GreenChoices for more information. A doctor referral to see another medical practitioner is preferred but is not a requirement:
